There is no greater name in Labour journalism than

“FORWARD”

IT WAS FIRST FOUNDED 50 YEARS AGO by the Rt. Hon. Tom Johnston, and since then its influence has spread from Scotland, where it was born, to every part of the country. Now it has become a national weekly published in London. To the Editorial Chair of the new Forward comes one of the best known of living journalists—Francis Williams, the man who edited the Daily Herald when it soared to the largest circulation in the world in the 'thirties: Public Relations Adviser to the Prime Minister, Mr. Attlee, at No. 10 Downing Street: now a TV and Radio personality known to millions of viewers as Chairman of Television's Press Conference: the man whose views on the Press in the famous New Statesman column, “Fleet Street Notebook,” are quoted wherever newspaper men meet.

The new Forward is something new in Labour journalism. It has been launched with all the publicity power of the multi-million strong Trade Union, Labour, and Co-operative movements behind it. Its readers include town councillors, members of public bodies, and officials of voluntary organisations, all of whom have a buying power far beyond their personal pockets. Forward readers are men and women who wish to spend their money intelligently. They have a loyalty to those who advertise in what they regard in a very special way as their own paper.
